Luke, Believe Him

Although Sir William Ramsay was educated in the Tübingen school (founded by F. C. Baur) which doubted the reliability of the New Testament, he would learn that his training was wrong. In 1880 he received an Oxford studentship for travel and research in Greece. His initial goal to prove that Luke had simply invented up the details in the book of Acts. His travels would take him to all of the cities visited by Paul in Greece and Turkey. He came away a believer in the historicity of Acts and of the Bible. His faith was confirmed.

Those who criticize the historicity of the Bible frequently turn to Luke because Luke claimed to have done research. Some critics turn to our text today, one we frequently read before sharing the Lord's Supper. Luke mentions Jesus sharing a cup, breaking bread, and finally sharing a cup again. Critics contend that Luke simply conflated two accounts of the Lord's Supper. In reality, Luke had done his homework and knew exactly what happened. The first cup was the beginning of the Passover meal and the second his institution of the Lord's Supper.
